and game sanctuaries; protection to fur bearing animals; bounties on animals and birds; good roads and their relation to forests, game and fish; pollution of streams; raising fish on the farm; need of fish hatcheries in West Virginia; Boy Scouts; forestry and forest fires.

Suggests Amendments.
Some amendments which should be made at the next session of the legislature are suggested in this report as follows: The enactment of a resident hunter's license for the purpose of raising revenue for the protection of forests from fire, and for the purpose of better protecting the land owners and farmers by providing means of identification by which the destruction of property and other acts of vandalism by hunters may be traced and the perpetrators punished.

A state fish hatchery should be provided so that the streams of our state may be stocked with fish. Our laws relating to forest fires should be amended so as to conform to the rules and regulations of the United States government. In order to receive co-operation from the government in this work, and to afford better protection to our forests, authority should be granted to the forest, game and fish warden to close certain depleted streams for fishing, so that fish planted may be given time to multiply. The open season on both trout and bass should be shortened. A limit on the number of trout taken per day should be fixed at 25, and the minimum number to be taken raised from five to six inches. Section 44 of the Acts of 1909 should be amended so as to make the meaning clear as to the catching of fish of the sucker variety in any way at any time, which is very conflicting and which is not plain even to the legal profession. It is suggested that it be made unlawful to catch fish in any of the streams of the state except with hook and line. Open and closed seasons on all migratory birds should be made to conform with the federal law. There should be a bag limit on gray squirrels of not more than twenty-five per day. All unnaturalized foreigners should be prohibited from carrying firearms of any kind. There should be a closed season on all fur-bearing animals except for about 60 days; when the fur is merchantable. Authority should be given to the forest, game and fish warden to lease land for game and bird refuges or sanctuaries, where all shooting may be prohibited and game and birds raised for stocking purposes.

Copies of this report are being mailed to all constables, justices and deputy wardens. Any other persons desiring a copy may secure same free of charge by writing the forestry, game and fish department, Belington, W. Va.

Gray Hair Becomes Dark, Thick, Glossy

TRY GRANDMOTHER'S OLD FAVORITE RECIPE OF SAGE TEA AND SULPHUR.

Almost everyone knows that Sage Tea and Sulphur, properly compounded, brings back the natural color and lustre to the hair when faded, streaked or gray; also ends dandruff, itching scalp and stops falling hair. Years ago the only way to get this mixture was to make it at home, which is messy and troublesome.

Nowadays we simply ask at any drug store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound." You will get a large bottle for about 50 cents. Everybody uses this old, famous recipe, because no one can possibly tell that you darkened your hair, as it does it so naturally and evenly. You dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair disappears, and after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully dark, thick and glossy and you look years younger.

SHE WAS A PEACH

By SETH MONROE.

"Anthony? You mean Jim Anthony who used to cover this territory for King & Co.?" Why, he has another route now, and he ain't traveling for King & Co. any more, neither. And Letty—you remember Letty, who used to be in service here. Well—say, I'd best start right at the beginning.

"Letty was the housemaid at this hotel when Anthony was King & Co.'s best salesman. Her mother had brought her up very strict, and when she died Letty was only eighteen and knew about as much of the world as a child does. The house was worth about two thousand, for property had been going up for a long time, but Letty couldn't live on nothing while it was on the market, so she came to the 'tavern' as second housemaid. In those days service of that kind wasn't considered any ways lowering in Wakefield.

"Anthony was staying over night. It was a small town on his route, and he hadn't made many sales that year, and he was naturally a bit depressed. But when he saw Letty sweeping down the hall he brightened up a bit. Anthony always liked a pretty face. So he comes up to her.

"Hello, kid, you sure are a peach," he says, and kisses her. That done, he goes into his room, thinking no more about it.

"Letty was flabbergasted. She had always been taught that to kiss a girl meant you wanted to marry her, and here was a perfect stranger who had kissed her the minute he set eyes on her. The little fool put down her broom and began to cry with happiness. Anthony was about forty and rather fat and flashily dressed, but he was all gold in Letty's eyes.

"Next morning Anthony, having renewed his grouch, went out of his room carrying his suitcase. He met Letty, who had been waiting on the stairs. 'Morning, miss,' said Anthony, and passed on, leaving Letty still more flabbergasted.

"I guess she cried all that day, but when night came she had made up her mind. Of course a fine gentleman like Anthony wouldn't want to marry a girl in service. Her little head was full of romances. She had read about men being true to death, and all that, and she made up her mind to make herself worthy of Anthony.

"She took her savings and went to night school with them. By the end of the year Letty was a fair stenographer and bookkeeper, and, as the 'tavern' was leaving to get married, Letty stepped into her shoes. The salary was a dollar less than her wages had been when she held the broom, but she was mighty glad.

"At the end of the year Anthony comes on his route again, and when Letty looked up from her books and saw him standing, waiting to register, her heart beat so that she couldn't speak.

"Anthony looked at her, and his grouch began to clear away. He always liked pretty girls.

"You sure are a peach, kiddo," he said, and chuckled her under the chin. 'How about the movies tonight?'

"With that he was gone, leaving poor Letty in a heaven of ecstasy. Her god had noticed her again; he was going to take her out. That flashy chap was a kid in Letty's eyes.

"I guess Ant. any wanted to take her out all right, though he hadn't the slightest notion that he had ever met her before. But he fell in with some of the boys, and they got him into a poker game, and when he got out, at midnight, he was $72 in the hole. And by that time he had forgotten all about Letty, who had been waiting all primed up since eight o'clock.

"Letty cried herself to sleep, and next morning Anthony was gone before she was down in the office.

"She gave up hope then, but she stayed on at the 'tavern,' keeping the books. She wouldn't have anything to do with the young fellows of Wakefield, but she was always nice to traveling men. About the time when Anthony was due again she began to ask timid questions about him. But nobody told her much; you see, they guessed something had happened between them. But at last Letty got the truth from a young salesman who was making the rounds.

"Anthony? he asked. 'Why, won't be here any more. I'm covering his territory now for King & Co. You see, they caught him with the goods, miss.'

"'Goods?' inquired Letty, puzzled. 'Yes. Two thousand dollars he had taken to gamble with. His case comes up for trial pretty soon, and he'll likely get about four years as a first offender.'

"Poor old Anthony! When he comes out he'll have hard work getting on his feet again."

"Next day Letty accepted two thousand dollars for her house, which had gone up to a good deal more than that in value, resigned her position, and started for New York. She went to King & Co.

"I want to see Mr. King on important business," she said.

"The clerk took her in and Mr. King stared at her, and she stared back at him. There was something tragical about Letty in little things. People didn't like the way she looked into their minds.

"Mr. King was growing uncomfortable when Letty burst out: 'If I pay you will you let him out, Mr. King?'

"I beg your pardon. Whom are you talking about?" asked the head of the firm.

"Mr. Anthony, sir," said Letty, depositing her two thousand dollars upon the table, and Mr. King stared harder than ever.

"Who are you?" he asked, eyeing first her and then the money. 'You ain't his wife, because he wasn't married last time I heard.'

"I'm going to be," said Letty quietly.

"Well, King was glad enough to drop the proceedings, and he took Letty round to the jail to see him. Anthony didn't feel too good to see King, but when he learned that he was to be free he saw the point.

"You can thank this young woman instead of me," says Mr. King. 'And let me tell you I wouldn't have taken her money if it hadn't been for the fact that she was engaged to you. In my opinion she is a good deal too good for you.' With which he turned on his heel, leaving Letty and Anthony looking at each other. To the best of his knowledge Anthony had never seen her before in all his life. He thought it was a game put up by some of his friends.

"Whose money was it, my dear?" he asked.

"Mine," answered Letty proudly. 'I know you don't care for me any more, but when I heard you were in trouble it seemed—seemed only right for me to—gasp—give you my money.'

"But you told Mr. King you were going to be married to me," said Anthony in bewilderment.

"I wouldn't marry you for all the wealth of Wakefield," Letty flashed out, and meant it, too. Somehow that word Wakefield recalled to Anthony the broken engagement, and then he understood, and remembered her. His hand shot out and grasped her under the chin.

"Kid," he said, 'you certainly are a peach.'

"Yes, sir, they have been married nearly three years now, and he travels for Constable. Letty is as proud as a queen of Anthony. I guess there is the right woman for the right man everywhere, but, Lord, what luck Anthony had finding her!"

RICH IN HISTORIC INTEREST

Excellent Reasons Why Mississippi's Old Capitol Should Be Preserved by People of State.

A bill for renovating Mississippi's old statehouse calls for the legislature of the state to consider a question more or less continuously discussed by Mississippians ever since the completion of the present capitol in 1903. For a comparatively modest sum the old capitol may be restored and put to excellent and appropriate use. So that today the sentimental plea for the building's preservation is strongly reinforced by utilitarian arguments.

Mississippi's old statehouse should be as dear to Mississippians who take pride in their state's history as the Cabildo is to Louisianians. Built in 1839 the old capitol at Jackson is identified with the most stirring events in the most stirring period of Mississippi's history.

In 1849 it housed the convention that formally asserted the principle of secession as a state right. In its hall the convention of 1861 was assembled and the ordinance of secession passed. During the stormy years just following the war it witnessed the dispossession of two governors by federal troops, and staged the notorious "black and tan" convention. It was the scene of the impeachment trial of Governor Ames. In 1890 it sheltered the constitutional convention which framed and enacted the franchise plan that solved the south's most portentous problem.

Andrew Jackson, Henry Clay, Prentiss, Lamar, Walthall, George and other makers of history have addressed Mississippi audiences in the historic structure. It witnessed the election of Jefferson Davis as major general of Mississippi troops at the beginning of the struggle between the states. From its rostrum the Confederate president in 1864 delivered his farewell address to the people of Mississippi.

Housewife's Problem.

At the opening of the Woman's Industrial exposition in New York City Chamberlain Henry Bruere said that getting food to the family is the great problem. The market will not do it, he says. In order to find out what is the right way, he says they sent around the world. They found the German housewives still go to market, but New York women cannot.

COMING BACK.

Yes, he deserves a lot of credit. It is mighty hard to "come back."

We hear this remark frequently. What is meant by "coming back?" Simply not losing your grit. It takes a mountain of grit to succeed, and those that succeed have it. It does not take much grit to start a savings account, but it takes some to keep at it.
